The Path to Growth

Spiritual Growth is a difficult thing to quantify. It is more easily felt rather than measured. It is intuitive and part of our self-awareness. There are things that make up spiritual growth we can look at on a personal basis.

Are we angry and bitter all the time? Are we afraid, envious, jealous and constantly holding grudges? Do we mistrust everyone? Do we rise in the morning and feel a lack of optimism? Are we perpetually unhappy? Do we spend all our money on things that end up not making us very happy?

Some of these things can be indicators of poor mental health, but they can also be a sign that our relationship with God is not what it should be. The opposites of all these are often a good marker for good spiritual health.
